Monday Starter

Catholic sisters are among those working for passage of the Freedom to Vote Act, a package of federal voting reforms introduced Sept. 14 meant to protect voters' rights and roll back state attempts to restrict or suppress voting.

Sr. Quincy Howard, coordinating director of advocacy, outreach and campaigns for the Faithful Democracy coalition and a government relations advocate at Network, a Catholic social justice lobby, said months of efforts by the faith community is paying off.

"This bill represents a coming together to find a path forward for badly needed reforms. Leaders from an array of faith traditions applaud today's introduction of the Freedom to Vote Act," Howard, a Dominican Sister of Sinsinawa, Wisconsin, said in a Sept. 14 press release. "While Democrats are working to win support from their colleagues across the aisle, passage of this legislation cannot wait. If Republicans refuse to support these needed reforms, then Senate leadership must find a way to pass this legislation. There is no time to waste and our democracy is too important."

Stephen Schneck, executive director of Franciscan Action Network, said voting restrictions are aimed at the very voters Christians are most called to serve.

"The Gospels say we are measured by what we have done for those in poverty, the discriminated against, the vulnerable, those whom society has made powerless, excluded, and disenfranchised," Schneck said in a Sept. 14 written statement. "Yet, today that Gospel message is threatened by state laws seeking in subtle and not so subtle ways to deter the impoverished and marginalized from voting. Federal legislation is needed to address these shameful challenges."

A HOME FOR ALL

The following are excerpts of a 2,300-word theological statement produced by New Ways Ministries. The statement can be found at www.NewWaysMinistries.org/press/all

The relationship between the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church and the community of believers, gay, lesbian, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) persons has long been fraught with tensions, negative emotions, and confusion. Equally alarming is that a vocal section of our church leaders too often does not fully consider Catholicism's most fundamental teachings and values when taking positions on LGBTQ social policy initiatives.

Because LGTBQ people suffer from unjust discrimination due to structural inequalities in law and social institutions, our Catholic faith compels us to speak out in support of the principle of non-discrimination. As Catholic theologians, scholars, church leaders, writers, and ministers, we affirm that Catholic teaching presents a positive case for ending discrimination against LGTBQ people. We affirm the Second Vatican Council's demand that "any kind of social or cultural discrimination"—"must be rooted and eradicated" (Constitution of Gens, 28).

Flow of the Times: Classification

Despite certain legal and social advances in recent years, LGBTQ+ people in the United States remain victims of significant discrimination. A recent report shows that more than one-third of LGBTQ+ people have faced some form of discrimination, and this rate is notably higher if one is transgender or a person of color. Discrimination manifests itself in healthcare, housing, employment, public accommodations, adoption and foster care, interactions with police, access to credit, and education. Such discrimination is often compounded by gender, race, religion, class, or other factors. Scripture strongly affirms that God hears and responds to the cry of the poor and suffering. Society's failure to protect LGBTQ+ people has left them crying out for justice.

Catholic Social Teaching

Catholic Social Teaching in church documents from the late 19th century to the present day, provide a clear basis to support non-discrimination protections for LGBTQ people, as the Catechism of the Catholic Church demands. Catholic Social Teaching is based on decades of theological reflection and has developed with the following components at its core:

- Because all human beings are endowed with human dignity and equal to one another, no individual or groups should be denied the civil rights enjoyed by others in society.

- Justice in society requires a preferential concern for any individuals or groups who are poor, vulnerable, or marginalised.

- Society must always value the common good, which includes protecting each person's ability to reach their full human potential.

Which Comes First, Justice or Peace?

Should the church's social justice tradition or its social justice tradition be the primary lens with which to examine LGBTQ equality initiatives? We believe it is important for Catholics and their nations to rely on the social justice tradition. This concept is strongly supported by Catholic reasoning.

- Both social ethics and sexual ethics are fundamentally concerned with how to live well and pursue Christian perfection. Social justice, however, is necessary prior to creating the appropriate conditions whereby people can choose the good when it comes to sexual ethics.

- The message of Scripture shows that Jesus was much more concerned with social arrangements than with sexuality.

- In Catholic thinking, public law is not an enforcement mechanism for the totality of personal morality.

- The Catholic ethical tradition rejects the idea that a just end can be obtained through unjust means. Discrimination against LGBTQ people cannot be used as a means to oppose ideas or behavior to which a religious body may object.

Signs of the Times

The Night Movement

Now is the time to act for non-discrimination protection by LGBTQ people. Both the church's and society's understandings of LGBTIQ people have changed in the following important ways. First, scientific evidence continues to prove that sexual orientation and gender identity are fundamental characteristics of an individual and universal in the human experience, not deviations from it. Second, as more LGBTIQ people are open about their orientation and/or identity, we witness more and more the healthy, holy, and wholesome ways that God's revelation is manifest in all people, including LGBTIQ people. Third, among the U.S. ally in our Catholic Church, more welcoming and affirming attitudes toward LGBTIQ people continue to expand.

Moreover, our church has placed a renewed emphasis on its social teaching as a constitutive aspect of its evangelical mission. The Catholic Church today enlivened by the dangerous memories of those on the outskirts of history produces the Religio of God especially

Conclusion

Our strong endorsement of non-discrimination towards LGBTQ people comes from careful reflection on what high, but not

We hope you will join in the mission to make both our church and our world a home for all.

A show of support for the LGBTQ community

Many Catholics are also speaking out in support for measures to protect LGBTQ people from discrimination.

"A Home for All: A Catholic Call for LGBTQ Non-Discrimination" was published as a four-page advertisement in the Sept. 17 print edition of the National Catholic Reporter and included more than 2,000 signatories, including 115 Catholic organizations. At least 48 of those were congregations of women religious. Among the individual signatories were St. Joseph Sr. Helen Prejean, Social Service Sr. Simone Campbell, Mercy Sr. Margaret Farley, and St. Joseph Sr. Elizabeth Johnson.

A number of vocal church leaders too often ignore Catholicism's fundamental values when taking positions on LGBTQ issues, the statement said.

"By supporting civic policies that promote discrimination and by opposing policies that would produce equality, these leaders bypass the Catholic Church's proud social justice tradition, the product of more than a century's development of social doctrine that increasingly supports the human rights of all people without exception," it reads. "As Catholic theologians, scholars, church leaders, writers, and ministers, we affirm that Catholic teaching presents a positive case for ending discrimination against LGBTQ people. We affirm the Second Vatican Council's demand that 'any kind of social or cultural discrimination... must be curbed and eradicated' (Gaudium et Spes, 29). We affirm that Catholic teaching should not be used to further oppress LGBTQ people by denying rights rooted in their inherent human dignity and in the church's call for social equality."

The statement was produced by New Ways Ministry, a national Catholic ministry of justice and reconciliation for LGBTQ people and the church.

"Society's failure to protect LGBTQ people has left them crying out for justice," the statement says. "As disciples of Jesus Christ, we too must hear and respond to this cry by pursuing policies and laws that remedy such grave injustices. To do any less would abdicate our responsibility as Christians to live the Gospel in public life by advancing the good of all people, especially those on the margins."

A milestone for the Maryknoll Sisters

The Maryknoll Sisters are celebrating a century of ministering in China.

Six intrepid sisters and two priests set sail from Vancouver, British Columbia, on Sept. 24, 1921, landing in Hong Kong on Nov. 3.

The congregation has created an extensive website for the occasion, with many photos, biographies of those first sisters, and even portions of their travel diaries.

There are also photos of the sisters currently ministering in China and a video of the work the sisters have done there. Between 1921 and 2004, 210 Maryknoll sisters served in Hong Kong, working in health care and as teachers and social workers.

Dominican sisters launch podcast's second season

The second season of "Hearts Afire" has begun.

A project of the Sisters of St. Dominic of Blauvelt, New York, the podcast launched in March with a first season of 10 episodes. Each episode streams live on YouTube and afterward is made available on Apple Podcasts, Spotify, and Audible.
